Dear Ms. Wood:

My essay "The Smallest Comfort" is not only about the blanket, but also about the reasons it is important to me. I have faced many obstacles and my blanket has always been by my side to comfort me.

I am quite pleased with my essay. Narrative essays tend to come more natural to me. I believe I did a great job overall. I especially like the part where I said, "Although, it was not just any blanket but a small, worn, old blanket that looked as if it had been over used for decades" because I feel like I did a great job describing the blanket. When most people think of a blanket they think of just a normal cover that keeps them warm. My blanket is different though, it is more special than that.

In my essay I am somewhat concerned that my transitions were not put together well enough. I hope that all of my readers can understand the transitions well and see how much my blanket really does mean to me. One example of that is the last two paragraphs. I don't know whether the movement from my memories of mom and dad back to the day I started with is clear enough. Also, I am worried that my comma usage is incorrect in a few places. I am not very good with commas. They always seem a little tricky to me. Hopefully I can get some good feedback on my mistakes and learn more for future uses.

This essay has taken up a lot of my free time and I have worked very hard on it. I hope that you enjoy my essay so that I know my hard work has paid off. Thank you very much for giving me the chance to show you my work and being courteous enough to point out my mistakes as well as the good qualities so that I can be better prepared for the future.

Sincerely,

Mackenzie P. Moore
