Dear Ms. Wood:

This is my essay "Everything's Important, Except For Our Future." In this essay I basically dissect a Sprint commercial, "At Sprint Everything Is Important." I explain what subliminal message is really being projected in this commercial. I wanted to get underlying message across as simple as I possibly could. My message, the interpretation, of the commercial is basically about how the adult community undermines the younger generation. I also wanted to point out how crucial this message has impacted our behavior and the younger generations future, and how that in itself is a crucial mistake.

This would by far be my favorite essay. I do believe I have done very well in this essay. I also have noticed my grammar seems to have improved, and feel much more confident when I write. In this essay, I really got to make a statement about the commercial and how I feel teens are being treated. I think I was very powerful in my conclusion when I said: "An advertisement can only go so far and do so much, but it is we who indoctrinate our youth. We must continue to be supportive, not just of those we love but those around us of all ages. It is vital to remember that these young faces will be the ones who guide and help us through our older age."

However, I noticed that I never took evidence from the commercial itself to support my theory, and I attempted to add a paragraph but did not like how confusing it became. Although I do feel good about not adding that additional paragraph I am hoping the essay is what you wanted. Nevertheless, I feel like the connections between the commercial and my points are clear. I really believe breaking the commercial apart to prove my point would become to "wordy," and lessen the point I was trying to communicate. I also seemed to have more trouble with the works cited and how to do it as well but also believe I have done a good job on them.

As always, I am looking forward to your notes and suggestions.

Sincerely,
