

Once you have identified a topic, begin thinking about a particular question or issue to research. What are some things you want to find out about this topic? Would you look at the social aspects, the psychology, the economics, the cultural role or implication? Your paper must go beyond just being informative. You must look at some aspect and make an argument about its role, effect, development, feasibility, or impact.

Develop two different but specific questions you would like to investigate about your topic, or if you're not sure, you can do a question for two different topics. Use the readings we've done about developing research questions to help you with these.

You will email these to me at kwood@epcc.edu. Make sure to use a proper subject line as described in the syllabus.

- DO NOT ATTACH YOUR QUESTIONS. Just type them in the text box. See the sample below.
- If you do not phrase these as questions, I will ask you to resubmit them as questions. The assignment will not be considered turned in until you send me your topic research questions. You will need to resubmit before the late period ends.

The screenshot shows an email client window with a blue header bar containing icons for Reply, Reply All, Forward, a trash can, and Junk, along with a Close button. The email content is as follows:

SUBJECT: Engl 1302, T/Th @ 1pm
Pennington, Rudi J

You replied on 9/6/2016 6:13 PM.

Sent: Tuesday, August 30, 2016 3:52 PM
To: Wood, Kelli L.

Good afternoon Kelli,

I spoke with you about a possible research topic that I was pretty sure was going to be it for me, but I recently stumbled upon a second.

Topic question # 1: How does "whitewashing" in Hollywood films and TV shows negatively impact minorities, people of color, and society as a whole?

Topic question # 2: How are today's extreme beauty standards physically and psychologically harming young girls and women?